

Why is it that it takes millions of dollars and ceaseless letters, calls, petitioning and more, from people like me, instead of our government officers just being able to choose what comes from having integrity? So many resources used to get Bush and others like him to not destroy the planet to run automobiles...for example. And to try to save the rain forests, or the air for God's sake...what would it take to get a Congress and a Senate FULL of people who cared enough about integrity, that once the voting was done, citizens could get on with their lives knowing the one they voted for would act appropriately? But since that isn't the reality at the present, then I have to be one of those who has to tell you it is NOT a good idea to put all the communications company under one aegis. Now did you really have to have your constituents tell you this? Do you have to have a call or a letter or whatever from every person over every single issue? If so, then go home, and let every issue be handled by computer. We'll all just vote on every single item that comes up, by computer, and we won't need any people actually there in the White House. That sounds good to me.

Carol Wright